Verdict in McWilliams Case

"We find that J. R. McWilliams came to his death by being struck by Union Pacific train No. 2 on the 23rd day of May, 1914 at the Willow street crossing. That said J. R. McWilliams we believe, stopped his auto to allow a freight train to pass and that he started to cross the tracks without receiving a signal from the watchman, and that said J. R. McWilliams was struck by No. 2 which was not under control."

The foregoing verdict was brought in last evening by the coroner's jury which sat on the case yesterday afternoon. They had waited to get the testimony from Mrs. McWilliams, but after her recovery she had no recollection of the accident except that she had started on a drive with Mr. McWilliams. The following jurymen sat on the case: A. F. Strelitz, E. N. Ogier, A. A. Schatz, W. J. Tilley, Richard Cox and J. H. Stone, foreman.

Visitors to this city from Maywood report that the Maywood dam was washed out last week letting the entire lake loose. No serious flood resulted, but the mill was closed down and a good fishing resort was ruined. The cause of the washout is not definitely known, but it is thought that a muskrat bored through the dam and let the water through, which later caused the washout.

Notice

Owing to the popularity and great demand for Homeopathic treatment, and requiring assistance, I wish to announce to my friends, old and new, that I have induced my classmate, Dr. S. J. Richardson of Pemberville, Ohio, to locate in North Platte in an independent practice, and he will also look after my work during any temporary absence of myself from the city.

Respectfully yours,

DR. J. S. TWINEM.

Dr. W. F. Crook returned Sunday from Denver where he went to attend the Elks' convention last week. The doctor drove through in his car which he took to Denver several weeks ago to have remodeled. He had a fine drive through and reports good roads all of the way. His car, since it has been remodeled, looks like a new one. The entire body was made over and he had it arranged for two seats.
